Korean jwahun with Ganghwa Sajabal mugwort

Warm the body with Ganghwa mugwort

The Yakseokwon jwahun experience

Jwahun is a traditional Korean practice: you sit on an earthenware vessel and warm the body with smoke and heat from burning mugwort. We use Sajabal mugwort grown in Ganghwa and dried for at least three years. Experience the seated session, with the skirt wrapped around the vessel, followed by warm care for the abdomen and back.

Yakseokwon, rooted in Ganghwa

Ganghwa mugwort, dried for 3+ years

We use Sajabal mugwort grown in Ganghwa’s sea breeze and mist, dried for at least three years before use. Placed in a small warmer and burned inside the earthenware vessel, it releases smoke and heat that rise around the body.

Mugwort also appears in Korea’s old stories. In the Dangun myth, a bear eats mugwort and garlic and becomes the woman Ungnyeo. Ganghwa is home to Mount Manisan, a place associated with Dangun’s legend. Discover the island’s nature and stories through its mugwort.

The story of Ganghwa mugwort

In Korea’s Dangun myth, the bear-woman Ungnyeo eats mugwort and garlic. Ganghwa’s Mount Manisan is associated with Dangun’s legend. We use Sajabal mugwort grown in the island’s sea breeze and mist, dried for at least three years.

02 | Getting ready

Change into the garment

Change into the garment provided. Arrange the skirt so you can sit comfortably, then follow the staff’s guidance.

03 | Mugwort and the warmer

Light the mugwort

Dried mugwort is lit in a small warmer and placed inside the earthenware vessel. Its smoke and heat warm the body.

04 | How jwahun works

Warmth inside the skirt

300°C

The brazier’s core temperature, not the temperature at the skin.

Wrap the skirt around your body and the vessel, and close the gap at the neck with a towel. Smoke and heat stay inside, warming the area around the perineum. Tell staff if you feel hot so they can adjust the heat.

05 | Sitting and hydration

Around 40 minutes, with a mugwort drink

Replenish fluids with mugwort extract and a mugwort drink as you sit. Please tell staff about heat or discomfort; do not feel you need to endure it.

06 | Warm care for the abdomen

Lie back and warm the abdomen

After the seated session, lie down. A towel and support are placed on your abdomen, with the mugwort warmer on top. Relax and follow the staff’s guidance.

07 | Warm care for the back

Warm the back, then rest

Warm care for the back completes the experience. Afterwards, drink plenty of water and rest while enjoying the warmth.

08 | Time together

A visit for the whole family
